Jaime Carrero, whose art is marked by irony and wit, has sent STAR readers a reason for a needed laugh after Hurricane Hugo. The sketches on these pages are the way Carrero believes different artists might view Puerto Rico, including Cupid, the artist of love. The sketches are a departure from Carrero’s usual work he is a playwright as well as an artist but at least one carries the arrow of the social criticism for which he is known. Carrero is director of the art department at Inter American University in San Germán.
